On the right extremity of the line the French official report states that the Franco-British troops broke up all attacks and continued to maintain their positions. The German Main Headquarters, on the other hand, claim that the forts to the north-west of the city have fallen, and that La Neuvilleite and Esthémy, two villages only some half-mile from the fown, have been taken. The venerable city of Rheims is evidently in danger. The Germans are evidently trying to push down the branch railway from Rheims, and to get enumand of the main line from Paris to Chalons, which runs along the Valley of the Marne. The German might report states that they are now south of Féreen-Tradenois. The French are resisting "with unsaring tenacity," and are already being reauforced by the reserves. The aim of the German is to reach their objective before these fresh twops can be brought up in force, while that of German masses can be met on more equal terms. There is a race against time in the campaign as a whole. Every day the structure of the reaping have had to be overcome in order to effect a rapid transfer of rearrest to the threatened point, but there is every reason to aspect that within a very brief space the men will be in the field. The aim of the Germans is to reach their objective before these fresh troops can be brought up in force, while that of the Allies is to delay the advance until the German masses can be met on more equal terms. There is a race against time in the battle now raging, as there is a race against time in the campaign as a whole. Every day that the decision is deferred is a gain to us and a loss to our enemies. Serious difficulties of transport have had to be overcome in order to effect a rapid transfer of reserves to the sthreatened point, but there is every reason to expect that within a very brief space the men will be in the field. The German parads of booty? is, doubtless, exaggerated, but it is inovitable that a retirement on such a scale should involve heavy losses, particularly munitious and guns. But throughout this prolonged contest against overpowering odds Englishmen and Frenchmen have vied with each other in provess and in tenacity. They have been driven back, and they are still being driven back, but they have deggedly fought on. It is their common boost, our Correspondent states, that they have never lost touch, except for a single brief interval, and he tells in another passage how a body of our young solders and a working party of older French Territorials got thinked up together, and fought shoulder to shoulder until almost all had fallen.

THE FRENCH AND ENGLISH DEFENCE.

Telegraphing yesterday, the Special Correspondent of The Times at the front says.—There was another big advance last night, on our right, to the north-west of Rheims, the British and French troops are making a determined stand, and have so far kept their positions. On the left flank the French have successfully held the enemy back from further progress in the direction of Compiègne. But between those two points the correy has steadily pushed southwards, in some places advancing some miles towards the River Marre. There is, perhaps, a good omen in the reappearance of this name on the map of the field of battle. We have netreated once before to the Marne, and then driven the enemy back, and what we have done once we can do again. But there, as elsewhere, we shall stop them. Confidence remains unshaken. As for the relations between the Britash and French soldiers, I doubt if at any time or place in the war the feeling of brotserhood.

THE HEROIC SOTH.

on their right and left, retired with them. I have written eften of some of the splendidly brave things done on the Craome plateau. Three times I have seen that glorious connecers Three times I have seen that glorious connecey of chalk and bones defended by the French under a smoking deluge of German shells, through which it seemed as though nothing could live, and I believe that those very Frenchmen would be the first to say that no page in its tragic story has a nobler message for France and her defenders than that last death charge of our English Territorials.

FEDERALISM.

It is understood, asys The Times, that Mr. Shorts, the new Chief Secretary, will wait until the Nationalista are back at Westminster to make a statement on the new Irish situation. He will be perfectly ready to make it nest stent, week. It is Mr. Shortt's intention to be in attendance at Westminster from Tuesday to Thursday in each week, and to spend the rest of his time in Ireland. A strong him reached the Lobby yesterday that the Government are considering the appointment of a Commission or Convention to advise on the possibility of framing a Federal Constitution for the United Kingdom. It is stated that Mr. Long's Committee feels the need of such an inquiry in the framing of the Irish bill, which is designed to fit in 'with a complete federal scheme. Sixty Liberal members met during the day for a free and unfettered talk on the federal solution. No resolution was passed, but there was a general understanding that the discussion would be resourced at an early date. Sir Thomas Whittaker presided. FEDERALISM.

THE COMMITTEE STAGE.

Clause 9, which contains provisions for use avoidance of broken school terms, was agreed to after some discussion.

On Clause 10, which deals with compulsory attendance at the continuation schools, and around the total number of scholars leaving the elementary schools. In any year should so attend. These, he said, should be selected with regard to the wishes of the parents and the aptitude of the scholars for continuation school teaching. Mr. HERBERT LEWIS said that this clause which extended continuation school teaching which extended continuation school to the wind to all boys and girls between the was contemplated would impose the physique of the country generation.

The amendment was negatived.

After some discussion.

Several matters of importance were discussed. It is certain that the question of the continuation of the mentary schools in any year should so attend to be a strong feeling, especially among the business element in the Nationalist ranks, that the party of the total number of the house, especially among the business the mentary schools in any year should so attend to be fill after the fill and the question of the mentary schools.
